

October 30, 2025
Alyssa B. Moore
Visiting Assistant Professor

Dear Members of the Recruiting Committee,

I am writing to apply for your position of Assistant Professor in Accounting. I am currently a visiting assistant professor at the Kelley School of Business at Indiana University. With this letter, I hope to share about myself and my interest in joining your team.

I am a financial archival researcher with an interest in information environments and economically related firms. In my dissertation, I investigate whether the adoption of blockchain technology to facilitate private interfirm communication influences managers' public disclosure choices. I hand collect a sample of firms that adopt blockchain supply chain solutions, which allow firms to coordinate with suppliers on a shared private ledger. Using a difference-in-differences design, I find results consistent with firms relying less on public disclosure to coordinate with suppliers following blockchain adoption. Specifically, I find that firms, especially those that bear greater proprietary costs of disclosure, decrease their public disclosure following blockchain adoption. I find that this decrease in disclosure has negative consequences, as it leads to greater analyst forecast errors. Collectively, my results suggest that although blockchain can improve private interfirm communication, it may have unintended consequences for the public information environment through reduced disclosure. Given the projected growth of blockchain, it is important for academics, practitioners, and regulators to understand the informational consequences of this technology. Currently, I am revising my dissertation for a second round at The Accounting Review.

In addition, I have several well-developed working papers. The first, developed from my second-year paper, examines the negative informational consequences of media coverage for economically related firms. My coauthors and I are currently revising the paper for a second round at The Accounting Review. The second study investigates a novel determinant of financial reporting quality: employee health. We are preparing the manuscript for submission at Management Science. The third examines the flow of politicians' privileged information in the market. The fourth paper uses my dissertation sample to examine how blockchain supply chain technology influences corporate misconduct.

My primary teaching experience is with financial accounting, but I am happy to fill the role(s) that best support my department. I love research and teaching and find that the two are great complements. Thus far, I have taught Intermediate Accounting II at two universities and have received high teaching ratings each year. I am also honored to have received a teaching award as a doctoral student. Importantly, I truly enjoy working with my students and colleagues to reach our full potential in the classroom, department, profession, and beyond.

Thank you so much for your time and consideration. I am excited for the opportunity to submit my application. I would be delighted to join your department. If there are any additional questions, please do not hesitate to contact me. I greatly appreciate your energies and hope to hear from you soon.

Best,

Alyssa B. Moore
am282@iu.edu | (502) 741-3651 | alyssabmoore.com